

The trees have cried their last golden tears for the passing of warm weather

Their bodies stand starkly against the glossy snow

The air is frozen to a crisp in a mark on the shadow of their faces

Disguised by the frigid wind, the eyes speak truths of frustration

And patience is the hardest of traits to conquer